Blue Jeans Williams.

A correspondent of the New York Herald.

writing from Elkhart, Indiana, gives the following interesting description of Blue Jeans Williams, the democratic candidate for Governor of that State :

"Blue Jeans" Williams, democratic candidate for Governor, supported by Dan Vorhees, dubbed by the extravagant fancy of the West, "The Tall Sycamore of the Wabash," has been moving through this region like a flaming torch, kindling, wherever he pauses a great fire of enthusiasm among the democratic farmers. He is greatly admired by the rural population and greatly despised by the towns' folks. I saw him this morning with his horney hand spread over the whole page of the hotel register, and he was certainly a curious sight to Eastern eyes. He appeared to stand over six feet and his face here a striking resemblance to that of Abe Lincoln. Some republican scribe, in writing a out his mouth, evolved from the depths of his proligoant lancy the conceit that it was put on warm and spread all over his countenance. His mouth is decidedly large, and when he laughs, which is at very rare intervals, it jeopardizes the comfort of his ears. He is a gaunt man like Lucolo, and as homely as a snake fence. II. has a thin batchet face and an uneven and an unpleasant complexion. In repose his expression is sorrowful and [meditative, his mouth wearing "a grim and aw!ul grace." ' His tall, lanky figure is surrounded by a wide-brimmed soft har, and taken in connection with his sugular limbs, which seem to be all goarled. and his slouching forward gait, remind me faintly of a cocoanut tree in a gale of wind. I studied for ten minutes or so the expression of his eyes, which gave me the idea that he was a kindly hearted man with a fair share of into ligence and shrewdness. His "blue jeaus," at which all the nobs and snobs of this Westem country have leveled their bitterest ridicule, appeared to me a most respectable and becoming suit. The blue is of a quiet, subdued tone, like an intensified Confederate gray. It is a very superior quality of jeans, as I was informed by a dry goods democrat, who actually took hold of it on the person of the candidate and rubbed it between his fingers to see how much cotton was in it. Had I not heard him laugh once or twice I should have gone away with the impression that he was like a great reformer of centuries ago-a man of many sorrows. In this, too, the resemblance to Lincoin, the most melancholy looking man that ever lived, struck me forcibly. Like Lincoln, too, he is no orator, but a great relater of anec dotes. In fact, his speeches consist of little else than a string of stories of which he is "reminded." From my notes of his speech at this specimen of his style :

"I am astonished, fellow citizens, at gentlemen coming among you who want to be thought respectable making such statements as Mr. such charges as that of a democratic Congress A N ADDRESS TO THE SICK. wanting to pay the rebel debt. We have enough to do to pay our own debt without paying anylong else's. Why don't they talk to the point? Why don't they explain how they disgraced the country with such people as Babcock and Beknap? Why, a man can't go out of this country to-day and say he is an American without hanging his head for shame. They say we done nothin' in Congress. Well, what we did do is a pill they don't care to swallow. We brought in a Secretary of Warguilty of stealin', and the the reason why we didn't try any more of them was because we wanted a new jury; an' that reminds me of the story of a man indicted for stealing hogs before a traverse jury. His connsel told bim it was no use goin' on with the ease; that everybody knew he was guilty, and it would only be a waste of time.

'Well,' said the man, 'You just go on with the ease and earn your money. What difference is it to you whether I am guilty or not, so long as you get your fee?' So the counsel went on, and the jury; to his great astonishment, brought in a verdict of not guilty. He went to his elient and said, 'That's more nor I expected; how do you account for it? "Oh! easy enough,' said the client. 'Every man of that jury had some of that pork.' So it is with the republican Senate of the United States. Every man of them has had some of that pork, an' that's how it is we found out no more yellow jackets than we did ("yellow jackets" are little stinging bees). Now, fellow citizens, I want to talk to you about some o' the savius' we made. I tried myself to stop as much stealin as I could, and I believe I saved to the taxpayers about $30,000. You have heard of Mc-Pherson, who was cerk of the House. Well, he used to draw out a list of the contingent expenses under the head of stationery, and there were more things put in that list than you ever dreint of. I had to go through McPherson's list an' that reminds me of the story of the old preacher who found 'Ole Dan Tuck r' in the hymo book, an' as his principles was to read ever, thing in the book he read that and sung

Here Mr. Williams read McPherson's list of stationery and dwelt upon the fact that knives were put down as stationery, though he always though they were included under the head of hardware. "An' that" said he "reminded me of a story of a man I once sent with some proluce to lown with instructions to the merchant that the projuice was consigned to to give him whatever he wanted. When I saw the merchant after he gave me a bill with an item in it for 'a gallion of hardware.' It was a puzzle to ne to knew what that meant till the merchant said, I guess, Mr. Williams, that gallon of hardware means a gallon of whiskey. The other day John Sherman, in a speech, took exception to what my friend Mr. Vorhees said about the republican administration putting the country to the expense of over $500,000,000 ayear in taxes, and that $150,000,000 were miscellaneous. I guess that 'miscellaneous' was like the gallon of hardware. The money West, anyhow, and we have got to make it

The foregoing specimen of Mr. Williams style of speaking may be very poor, but its efleet on a rural audience is surprising. His pat ancelotes were applauded to the echo, and as the man never smiles his amusing stories have all the greater zest. There is no question about Williams' popularity with the farmers. This is a State where few men wear silk hats, and the tillers of the soil are the backbone of the

I had an interview with Mr. Williams in his room at the hotel prior to his attending the public meeting, when the following conversa

"How d'ye do, Mr. Williams?"

"Weil and middlio,' both thank'ee," said he, stretching his legs away over the carpet til his great feet projected upward in the centre of the room as distant outposts to the rest of his anatomy. "I've been travelin' and takin' night and day for quite a bit and I feel a sort o' lazy. Travelin' don't agree with me, and if it wasn't the fact that the people have shown me so much kindness everywhere and ha' most killed me.' "Well, Mr. Williams, I have been, I must confess, as anxious to see your suit of blue jeans as to see yourself. Now, tell me honestly if the republican papers are correct in saying you wear these things for mere effect to catch the granger vote?"

Uncle Jimmy laughed with eyes and ears (a most remarkable phenomenon) and then in a tone artless and pathetic enough to mitigate the scorn of the bitterest among his republican foes replied: "In the county where I was raised they never wore anything but blue jeans for many, many years, 'cos they could get nothing better to wear. There wasn't a store within a hundred miles of us that kept cloth or tail ors' fixios. We made our own wearin' truck, and we thought it no disgrace neither. I learn ed all I know, though 't aint much, in clothes made of blue jeans. I learned to be fair and quare with every man without the help of broadcloth and linen shirt bosoms. I went a coortin (here the old man's voice actually forgot itself and trembled) in blue jeans and neither she por the minister of jected to marry me on that account when the time came. I dun'no as I need say as much, but the happiest days o' my life were passed without ever carin' to exchange my home-made jeans for New York or Injianapolis fashions, and I'd be ashamed o' myself if I was to go back on them now, be cause a lot o' little minded jackassas think fit to sneer at them." Here the speaker's voice took on a tone of earnest feeling, and he grasped the knees of his blue jeans pantaloons as though they were old and very dear friends. dearer now than ever because of scorn and per secution. "Perhaps," he went on, "if Schuyler" Colfax had been wearing blue jeans he wouldn't ha' wanted any Credit Mobelier. Perhaps if Garfield was content with a suit on his back and a pair o' plough handles in his fists his appetite and conscience would be bet ter to-day. Don't you think if Belknap and Babcock and Grant himself had to stick to bine jeans they wouldn't ha' wanted to trouble their heads as to where they could make the biggest pile and how they could cut the biggest dash? D n't you know that fine houses, fine clothes and fine everything else make some men fools and other men knaves?'

"I suppose, Mr. Williams, you expect to be elected Governor?"

"Well, all I can say is that up to the Nation al Road they give me 15,000 majority." (The National Road is a line running due east and west through the centre of the State, and Mr. Williams refers to all that section of country south of it.)

"What do you think, Mr. Williams, of Mor ton' cinvass?"

"Well, Merton reminds me of the cheap John fellows in our Western towas. People don't care to trust them, but they go and listen to them anyhow, and perhaps they invest as far as a skein of thread or a pocket comb, but the gathering of farmers to-day I give you they don't go in heavy. If Morton hadn't a good pair of lungs he would be a very small potater.
